

CALL FOR PAPERS

1. Conceptual framing

The conference invites scholarly interrogation of gender-based violence as a constitutional, socio-legal, institutional, developmental, and human rights concern.

Contributions are encouraged from doctrinal, comparative, empirical, interdisciplinary, and practice-based perspectives that critically examine the effectiveness of legal systems, institutional responses, and public policy interventions aimed at addressing GBV.

Particular attention will be given to contributions that

- interrogate the relationship between law, justice, and social transformation;
- examine the implementation gap between policy commitments and lived outcomes;
- advance theoretical and evidence-based models for systemic reform;
- explore judicial, prosecutorial, and institutional accountability mechanisms;
- consider intersectional experiences of violence and exclusion; and
- contribute to practical and sustainable interventions for prevention and protection.

The conference is anchored in

- South Africa's constitutional framework, particularly the rights to equality, dignity, freedom, and security of the person;
- the National Strategic Plan on Gender-Based Violence and Femicide (NSP-GBVF);
- regional and international human rights instruments, including the Maputo Protocol and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW);
- transformative constitutionalism and access to justice frameworks; and
- African and Global South perspectives on justice, institutional reform, and social accountability.

2. Conference sub-themes and priority research tracks

Submissions may address, but are not limited to, the following thematic areas:

A. Constitutionalism, Rights, and State Obligations

- Positive obligations of the state in GBV prevention and response
- Horizontal application of rights in private violence contexts
- Structural remedies and supervisory jurisdiction

B. Criminal Justice and Evidentiary Theory

- Trauma-informed adjudication and evidentiary standards
- Credibility assessment and epistemic injustice
- Sentencing theory: deterrence versus proportionality in GBV

- Data as a tool for accountability

3. Methodological scope

The conference welcomes submissions employing a range of methodologies, including

- doctrinal legal analysis;
- empirical qualitative and quantitative research;
- comparative and transnational studies;
- socio-legal and interdisciplinary approaches; and
- policy analysis and governance studies.

Interdisciplinary submissions drawing from fields such as law, sociology, psychology, criminology, economics, political science, public health, social work, data science, and gender studies are strongly encouraged.

4. Who should submit

The conference welcomes submissions from

- academics and researchers;
- members of the judiciary;

¹ Rurality is not just a geographic designation; it is a complex intersection of isolation, distinct socio-cultural norms, economic limitations, and systemic institutional neglect.

- legal practitioners and advocates;
- policymakers and government officials;
- civil society organisations and activists;
- postgraduate students and emerging scholars; and
- practitioners working in the GBV response sector.

5. Submission requirements

Interested participants are invited to submit:
