LIMINALITY
threshold | transition | transformation

Liminality is an exhibition of artworks created by 1st to 3rd year students from the Department of Fine Arts, University of the Free State in 2019 and 2020. As many of the artworks were created during the lockdown of 2020, the exhibition gives a unique window into what students grappled with in this time: a global pandemic, changed modes of teaching, the accessibility of resources, inequality, mental health, the implications of social distancing and isolation. The subtitle of the exhibition 'threshold | transmission | transformation' refers to the creative processes that students engaged with in these adverse circumstances resulting in a wide array of artworks in both traditional and adapted mediums. The exhibition speaks to our shared experiences of insecurity, fragility and discord, and to the resourcefulness and immutability of creative expression.

The exhibition takes place in the Johannes Stegmann Art Gallery from 17 May to 2 July 2021. Due to COVID-19, access to the Bloemfontein campus is restricted to permit holders. A virtual exhibition will be available online at:
