Critical Leadership

Defined as the ability to utilise critical thinking skills to make decisions about leadership actions in different [and often difficult] situations, critical leadership is closely interwoven with education and scholarship in an intellectual and organic sense. Critical leadership is particularly relevant in the Fourth Industrial Revolution framework in which the world is now positioned. This kind of leadership has become a necessary skill for all. It involves the struggle to understand how critical thinking is informed in situations of challenge and change, and how critical decisions which respect human value are taken.
